Tone2 Electrax X64 Bit Torrent TOP

Tone2 Electrax X64 is the latest version of Tone2 Electrax. It is the perfect replacement if you are looking for an instrument that offers. Ask HN: Can I legally do that? - cordortw I am a consultant and I recently set up a paypal account for my client. I will be charging him a fixed monthly fee for a service he has recently received (very minor update to an existing system). Is this legal? I have already done this once for my friends' business and there was no issue, but I am not so sure about this. I read online that charges like this are illegal, but I'm thinking if I paid tax on it I could break even on this. I am not a lawyer. No one in my office has ever charged for anything and I'm sure it is never done in the United States. I am going to keep this very low key. I will not be charging for the update, but I will charge for the service (monthly fee). I may even mention it as a bonus update. Is this legal? No one in the office is doing anything like this, but the service I am offering is very minor and my client has already requested the update. ===== lionhearted I'd call it illegal. But if you're going to go forward with it, and you explicitly say you intend to charge money, ask yourself one question before you decide: "Am I willing to get arrested, taken to jail, or spend a lot of money to prove my innocence? Do I really want to go through that if I am wrong?" No reason to start. ~~~ dillon How is it illegal? ~~~ lionhearted They're not talking about a sensible legal question, they're talking about the I'm willing to get arrested, taken to jail, or spend a lot of money to prove my innocence. What's stopping you from lying and saying you won't, then suddenly do it if it turns out you're right, but might get your client into trouble? ~~~ dillon If he's asking himself this question I'm assuming he's going to do it. ----- mkramlich If it's for a client of his, I'm sure it's fine.
